China vows to retaliate after Trump signs HK sanctions bill

Beijing accused the US of 'gross interference in Hong Kong affairs'

STEVEN LEE MYERS
Beijing, July 15

CHINA ON WEDNESDAY sharply criticized President Trump's moves to strip Hong Kong of its preferential trading status with the United States and clear the way for new sanctions on officials and companies there, vowing to retaliate with punitive measures of its own.

The response from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Beijing promised to continue a pattern of tit-for-tat punishments that have accompanied the sharp downward turn in relations between the two countries on a variety of fronts, from trade to technology to human rights.

China was swift to criticize Mr Trump's latest actions, which he announced at a rambling White House news conference on Tuesday. Those moves, along with his remarks, underscored the extent to which relations with Beijing have become intertwined with the American presidential election.

Mr Trump said he had issued an executive order revoking the special trading status that Hong Kong had enjoyed for more than two decades, following the Chinese government's imposition of a sweeping new national security law there.

The law came into force on June 30, and its chilling effect on political freedoms in the city - which, under a formula called "one country, two systems" - has already been evident in a series of arrests and police raids.

Mr Trump also signed legislation, adopted overwhelmingly in May by Congress, that authorizes the administration to impose sanctions on officials or institutions, including banks, that were found to have undermined Hong Kong's semiautonomous status.

His executive order, besides revoking the territory's special trading status, calls for sanctions against people deemed to have been involved in a variety of acts in Hong Kong, including arrests made under the new security law and actions that undermine democratic processes or limit the news media's freedoms.

Officials in Beijing reacted harshly. "The act on the United States side maliciously denigrates Hong Kong's national security legislation, threatens to impose sanctions on China and gravely violates international law and basic rules of international relations," the Ministry of Foreign Affairs said in a statement.

Unofficial Hong Kong vote sees new generation take over democracy battle

REUTERS
HONG KONG, July 15

A YOUNGER, MORE defiant generation of Hong Kong democrats has secured the most votes in unofficial primary elections in the Chinese-ruled city, setting the stage for a battle with pro-Beijing politicians for control of the city's legislature.

The success of young contenders in the primaries organized by the pro-democracy camp on the weekend to pick candidates for a Sept. 6 election for a 70-seat city assembly comes amid widespread resentment of a national security law that Beijing imposed last month.

Beijing denounced the vote as illegal and warned it may

Beijing denounced the vote as illegal and warned it may have violated the new security law, which has raised fears for the freedoms that have underpinned Hong Kong's open society and success as a financial hub.

Prominent pro-democracy activist Joshua Wong won in his district, but he has been disqualified from previous elections and could face similar hurdles this time.

Wong warned against any sweeping disqualification of candidates when he held a news conference with 15 other young politicians who won in their districts.

"If the government cracks down on us and disqualifies all the candidates who joined the primaries, it will cause more outrage in the international community and encourage more people to vote for the pro-democratic camp in September," Wong said.

The 16 - all but one under 30 and dressed in black T-shirts - are part of a so-called localist or resistance camp, which outshone the cohort of traditional democrats, which had secured 12 candidate slots as of Wednesday afternoon.

UK Huawei ban triggers China warning as US President takes credit

BLOOMBERG
London, July 15

BORIS JOHNSON FACES a diplomatic minefield after banning China's Huawei Technologies Co. from the U.K.'s next-generation wireless networks, as Beijing accused him of breaking promises and Donald Trump claimed credit for the prime minister's decision.

China's Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying said the U.K. is cooperating with the U.S. to "discriminate, oppress and exclude" Chinese firms, and that Beijing "will take all necessary measures to safeguard Chinese companies' legitimate interests."

In comments likely to do Johnson few favors as he navigates the spat with China, Trump told reporters in Washington on Tuesday he personally intervened in the U.K. decision. "We convinced many countries -- many countries -- and I did this myself, for the most part -- not to use Huawei because we think it's an unsafe security risk," he said.

China has accused the UK of "dancing to the tune" of the US over Huawei and said that Britain no longer pursues an independent trade policy. It is a narrative that undermines both Johnson's desire for what he calls a mature relationship with China, as well as his wish for post-Brexit Britain to be seen as a bastion of free global trade.

On Wednesday, UK Health Secretary Matt Hancock sought to downplay Trump's involvement during his morning media round. "We all know Donald Trump don't we?" he told Sky News. "All sorts of people can try to claim credit for the decision, but this was based on a technical assessment by the National Cyber Security Centre."

Even so, the UK announcement — a reversal of the position set out by Johnson's government less than six months ago — represents a diplomatic victory for Trump. The president initially failed to persuade the British government to block Huawei from its 5G networks but then imposed fresh sanctions against the company in May which forced Johnson to retreat. Other countries may now follow.

Even without the sanctions move, Johnson might have struggled to stick to his position on Huawei. Conservative lawmakers were convinced he was underestimating the threat posed by China, and were determined to block Huawei from 5G networks. They rebelled in a symbolic vote in the Commons in

Under the British blueprint announced Tuesday, operators will not be able to add any new Huawei components to their 5G networks after December 31 this year

March, reducing Johnson's parliamentary majority from 80 to 24.

Since then the U.K. has gone into lockdown as a result of coronavirus and the confrontation over Hong Kong has escalated, increasing Tory concerns about China.

Under the British blueprint announced Tuesday, all equipment made by the Shenzhen-based company that's already installed will need to be removed from 5G infrastructure by 2027.

The ban on Huawei will cost U.K. operators as much as 2 billion pounds ($2.5 billion) to implement, and will delay the rollout of 5G networks by between two and three years, the government said.

China signals clamp down on easy money

BLOOMBERG
Beijing/Shanghai, July 15

CHINA'S POLICY MAKERS have sent another warning to property and stock investors in an attempt to prevent the formation of asset bubbles that could dilute their efforts to fund the economic recovery.

The municipal government of Shenzhen, the tech hub where home prices have seen the biggest surge in two years in recent months, tightened the rules on property transactions on Wednesday. The moves signal a careful balance being enacted by Chinese authorities as they try to keep a steady credit supply to businesses struggling to recover from the post-Covid slump, while avoiding a repeat of asset bubbles seen in previous rounds of stimulus.

WH distances itself from Navarro's screed against Fauci

BLOOMBERG
Washington, July 15

THE TRUMP ADMINISTRATION is distancing itself from a senior adviser's critique of Anthony Fauci, the immunologist who has delivered warnings about the coronavirus's resurgence as the president pushes to reopen.

Peter Navarro, the White House's director for the Office of Trade and Manufacturing Policy, wrote an op-ed published in USA Today, criticising Fauci. Navarro also had earlier sent a similar statement to CBS.

The statement was not signed off on by the White House communications office, according to Alyssa Farah, the White House's director of strategic communications. Navarro was speaking for himself, Farah said Wednesday.

In his statement, Navarro said Fauci has regularly been wrong, saying he didn't favor Trump's travel ban from China, initially downplayed the risk of the virus and flip-flopped on masks. "When you ask me whether I listen to Dr. Fauci's advice, my answer is: only with skepticism and caution," Navarro wrote.

It's the latest broadside from the administration of one of the country's top health officials. Donald Trump himself has chastised Fauci over his caution about opening schools, though said this week the two get along well. Dan Scavino, another senior adviser to Trump, posted an image to his Facebook campaign depicting Fauci as "Dr. Faucet," washing the US economy down the drain.

Fauci was once a ubiquitous figure in daily task force briefings, but hasn't spoken publicly at the White House since late April. Fauci has regularly been more candid in warning of the virus's risks, and the dangers of a hasty reopening, than Trump himself and other administration officials.

White House critics of Fauci have drawn pushback from Republican circles. "We don't have a Dr. Fauci problem," Senator Lindsey Graham, a Trump ally, said Tuesday in South Carolina, according to The State newspaper.

"The attempted trashing of his reputation by the likes of a kook like Peter Navarro is a disgrace," Tony Fratto, a White House aide under George W. Bush, tweeted Wednesday.

Fauci, speaking Tuesday before the op-ed was published, was asked about criticism bubbling up from the White House.

"It doesn't bother me. I have a job to do and I do it. I don't pay attention to noise, I pay attention to substance. All of that is noise," he replied.

'Hands free': Automakers race to next level of not quite self-driving cars

REUTERS
Detroit, July 15

AUTOPILOT, PROPILOT, COPILOT: Automakers have many names for new systems that allow for hands-free driving, but no safety or performance standards to follow as they roll out the most significant changes to vehicle technology in a generation.

Spurred by Tesla Inc's success and eager to start profiting from billions spent on autonomous driving research,

To address concerns about liability, some automakers are installing cameras inside vehicles, along with warning systems, to ensure drivers remain attentive and ready to take over manual control when necessary automakers are accelerating plans to automate routine driving tasks such as cruising on a highway and make them widely available within five years, industry executives said.

Most traditional automakers until recently had resisted allowing drivers to take their hands off the steering wheel for extended periods, concerned about product liability claims. Now, hands-free driving systems offer a new and sorely needed source of profit for automakers and suppliers such as Aptiv Plc, especially when this technology is packaged with other extra-cost options. "Consumers are willing to pay extra — sometimes a lot of money — for advanced technology and features that are convenience-oriented rather than strictly focused on safety," IHS principal analyst Jeremy Carlson said.

To address concerns about liability, some automakers are installing cameras inside vehicles, along with warning systems, to ensure drivers remain attentive and ready to take over manual control when necessary.

Critics charge that the technology to automate highway driving, parking and navigation in stop-and-go traffic is being deployed in a regulatory vacuum where an absence of industry-wide standards and common terminology creates confusion about what the systems can safely do.
