China virus outbreak may hit economy, financial markets

News that a new coronavirus that has afflicted hundreds of people in central China can spread between humans has rattled financial markets

ELAINE KURTENBACH
Bangkok, January 22

NEWS THAT A new virus that has afflicted hundreds of people in central China can spread between humans has rattled financial markets and raised concern it might wallop the economy just as it might be regaining momentum.

Health authorities across Asia have been stepping up surveillance and other precautions to prevent a repeat of the disruptions and deaths during the 2003 SARS crisis, which caused $40 billion-$50 billion in losses from reduced travel and spending.

The first cases of what has been identified as a novel coronavirus were linked to a seafood market in Wuhan, suggesting animal-to-human transmission, but it now also thought to be spread between people. As of Wednesday, some 440 people were confirmed infected and nine had died from the illness, which can cause pneumonia and other severe respiratory symptoms.

A retreat in financial markets on Tuesday was followed by a rebound on Wednesday, as investors snapped up bargains. Share benchmarks were mostly higher both in Asia and in Europe.

While the new virus appears much less dangerous than SARS, "the most significant SARS risk could lie ahead as the regional peak travel season takes hold, which could multiply the disease diffusion," said Stephen Innes, chief Asian strategist for Axi Corp. "So, while the risk is returning to the market, the lights might not turn green until we move through the Lunar New Year travel season to better gauge the coronavirus dispersion."

The 2003 outbreak of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome in China, along with cases of a deadly form of bird flu, resulted in widespread quarantine measures in many Chinese cities and in Hong Kong. More than 8,000 people fell sick and just under 800 people died, a mortality rate of under 10%.

While the thousands of people die of influenza each year, such new diseases raise alarm due to the uncertainties over how deadly they might be and how they might spread. That's especially true during the annual mass travel of the Lunar New Year festival, which begins this week.

"The cost to the global economy can be quite staggering in negative GDP terms if this outbreak reaches epidemic proportions as until this week, the market was underestimating the potential of the flu spreading," Innes said in a report.

In China, health officials stepped up screening for fevers. "We ask the public to avoid crowds and minimise the public gatherings to reduce the possibility of cross-infection," Li Bin, deputy director of the National Health Commission, said on Wednesday.

Just as with SARS, though, the impact of the disease is likely to fall heaviest on specific industries, such as hotels and airlines, railways, casinos and other leisure businesses and retailers, analysts said. Most declined on Tuesday but rebounded on Wednesday as investors locked in profits ahead of the Lunar New Year holiday. The outbreak is a boon, meanwhile, for pharmaceutical companies and makers of protective masks and other medical gear.

"If the pneumonia couldn't be contained in the short term, we expect China's retail sales,

Masks, hand sanitiser sell out in China

THE DEADLY virus spreading across China has spurred a run on protective face masks and hand sanitiser, with store shelves stripped and resellers hawking the items for inflated prices. In one Shanghai mall, customers lined up for nearly an hour at a drugstore Wednesday waiting for a shipment of 100 boxes of masks to arrive. They sold out within 30 minutes, said pharmacist Duan Yue, even after the store limited each person to one pack each. Staffers told customers immediately upon entry: "everything is gone." —PTI

Airlines scour the world for scarce 737 MAX simulators

ALLISON LAMPERT,

Washington, January 22

AIRLINES ARE SCRAMBLING to book time in 737 MAX training facilities as far afield as Fiji, Iceland and Panama, operators said, after Boeing recommended pilots be trained in one of the few simulators replicating the latest model.

That means thousands of pilots from more than 54 airlines need to squeeze into about three dozen 737 MAX simulators around the world before they can fly the plane.

"Boeing is recommending that all 737 MAX pilots undergo training in a 737 MAX simulator prior to flying the aircraft in commercial service," the company told Reuters on Tuesday evening, the first confirmation of its new policy.

On January 7, the company had recommended using a simulator but did not specify what type. The 737 MAX has been grounded since March 2019 after two fatal crashes and cannot return to service until regulators approve software changes and training plans.

The estimated 34,737 MAX simulators in service, produced separately by CAE and Textron's simulator and training division TRU, are less than a quarter of the number of older 737 NG simulators certified by US and European regulators.

"I think that what a shortage of simulators will mean is the fleet of MAXes will start flying more slowly than what the airlines would like," said Gudmundur Om Gunnarsson, managing director of TRU Flight Training Iceland, a joint venture between Icelandair and Textron's simulator and training division.

"In the beginning it was said that simulator training would not be needed," he said. "This changes it totally." Gunnarsson said TRU Flight Training Iceland had more inquiries than usual from potential airline customers about the use of its 737 MAX simulator since Boeing's January 7 announcement. Boeing said on Tuesday it did not expect to win approval for returning the 737 MAX to service until mid-year, longer than previous estimates, in part because regulators are working on new pilot training requirements.

Many airlines did not order 737 MAX simulators, assuming they could rely on the older 737 NG simulators because the types were so similar. Simulators can cost $310 million ($7.64 million) to $20 million each, with the 737 MAX at the upper end, CAE said. Hourly rates for simulator training can cost $500 to $1,000, it said. High demand for 737 MAX simulators has led the Montreal company and its rival TRU to produce simulators for customers they have yet to line up. —REUTERS

'Ghosh predicted Nissan will go bankrupt by 2022'

BLOOMBERG
Tokyo, January 22

NISSAN MOTOR WILL go bankrupt within two to three years, Carlos Ghosn told a defense attorney during more than 10 hours of interviews before the auto executive skipped bail and left Japan.

The former chairman and chief executive officer of Nissan Motor and Renault made the prediction last year in a series of conversations, said Nobuo Gohara, a former prosecutor who also is a vocal critic of Japan's justice system.

"He told me that Nissan will go bankrupt within two to three years," said Gohara, who held a news conference in Tokyo on Wednesday to discuss his conversations with the now-fugitive auto titan. Ghosn didn't offer detailed reasons why Nissan would run into difficulties, according to the lawyer.

Azusa Momose, a spokeswoman for Nissan, declined to comment.

The Yokohama-based company is suffering from declining car sales in China and Europe, prompting it to slash profit and sales forecasts for the fiscal year ending March 31 and say it would eliminate 12,500 jobs globally.

Gohara said he met with and interviewed Ghosn five times during a two-month period, just before the former auto executive fled, for a book he planned to publish before the start of Ghosn's trial, which no longer is likely to happen. Gohara last met with Ghosn two days before his December escape to Beirut.

The attorney said he had permission from Ghosn to disclose the details of their conversations.

Gohara regularly comments on issues surrounding the Japanese justice system in his blog and TV appearances. Since Ghosn's arrest, he's also criticized what he calls Japan's "hostage justice" system and the country's recent introduction of plea bargaining.

The 65-year-old Ghosn, speaking earlier this month from Beirut, said he fled Japan because he no longer thought he would have a fair and speedy trial. The former executive was facing several charges of financial misconduct, including underreporting his income and breach of trust.
